Staff Sgt. Adrian Hill began his jump into the Winston-Salem Air Show on Sunday. The U.S. Army Parachute Team, more commonly known as the Golden Knights, performed over the air show on Saturday and Sunday. The air show featured performances by the Red Thunder Aerobatic team, helicopters, biplanes, World War II-era aircraft and a jet-powered school bus.

A member of the Golden Knights trailed smoke on Sunday above the Winston-Salem Air Show. The team has done more than 16,000 shows in 50 states and 48 countries.

The shadow of the Golden Knights C-31A Troopship skims the landscape.
